

SIX OF FAMILY DIE IN FLAMING DWELLING

Father, Mother and Four Children
Trapped in Early Day Blaze.

CHENNA, Mass., July 29.—Six members of a family living on the top floor of a three-story brick tenement house on Beacon Street were suffocated in a fire which damaged the building early to-day. They were Michael Jankowski, Mrs. Jankowski and four of their six children—Mary, eighteen years old; Sophia, sixteen; Helen, ten, and Joseph, 3. The other children and four lodgers were rescued when partly overcome.

The fire started on the ground floor and a dense volume of smoke rushed up through an airshaft. Some of the victims evidently had been awakened and tried to escape by a doorway, but succumbed to the flames and smoke to the floor.

The effect is charming, especially as a replica of the flower in the patterned voile is embroidered in wool at intervals around it, and on its very edge the main coloring in the flower is emphasized by a band of silk. This same silk also forms a band on the bottom of the plain white voile foundation skirt. Above it large worsted embroidered flowers lend their distinctive charm, while topping all is a rather short tulle of the flowered voile.

As will be seen from the sketch at the left, this tunic is interrupted in front by a long tie, which makes use of the plain voile bound with the colored silk, while a belt and tie of the same complete the frock. That a delightful lingerie frock is capable from the design of this model is evident from the effect pictured at the left. Balloons and lace combine in the most attractive manner. Though the main bodice portion is of the bas-tiste, which, by the way, may be plain or embroidered in a dot or other tiny figure, the lace tunic whose soft fullness trims the sides and back depends on its own edge for a finishing.

Several of these delicate bows serve to elaborate the skirt near bottom, while a single line of cording finishes the edge, and also outlines the apron tunic. The lace tunic whose soft fullness trims the sides and back depends on its own edge for a finishing.

DESCRIPTION OF THE FROCK.

That is far, however, from the subject of my sketch for to-day. This dainty summer frock, particularly suited to a Miss, in its demure simplicity, favors equally two materials for its development. At the right is suggested a flower patterned voile combined with plain white voile. A plain blouse waist with short tight sleeves is elaborated with a pretentious collar of plain white which
